WORKING PAPERS AND WORK IN PROGRESS

"Are Natural Disasters Disastrous for Learning? Evidence from Seven Asian Countries", with Jere Behrman, Emily Hannum, Minhaj Mahmud, and Fan Wang [\[Draft\]](#) [\[Slides\]](#) Under Review

Summary: We estimate natural-disaster impacts on children's school enrollments and math skills and test for impact heterogeneities with respect to age and gender by linking survey data on children aged 5 to 17 to time- and geo-coded disaster variables. We find significant negative effects of early life natural-disaster exposures on enrollments and math skills and the effects differ across genders, ages, and regions.

"The Long-Term Human Capital Consequences of Exposures to Natural Disasters: Evidence from India" [\[Draft\]](#)

Summary: Linking over 500 natural disasters in India with panel survey data, I construct a sample of 71,000 individuals in adolescence and adulthood, with natural disaster exposure trajectories in early life. Exploiting geographical and temporal variations in the exposures, the study indicates that early-life exposures to natural disasters leads to lower educational attainment, higher prevalence of chronic health conditions, and reduces labor force participation in general and monthly or annually paid employment.

"The Effect of Children Gender on Younger Siblings' Health Outcomes"

Summary: I estimate the effects of children's gender structure in two-child families on the health outcomes of younger siblings from various developing countries, and discover that different gender compositions significantly affect younger siblings' mortality rates, with second-born daughters benefiting the most in households with both a son and a daughter.
